Why is the research being conducted?

This is a Australian Research Council funded research project investigating the relationship between migrant communities and cultural heritage in Queensland.

What you will be asked to do

You will be asked to complete a short wellbeing survey after the performance.

The basis by which participants will be selected

Participants in this research should be adults (aged over 18), who have witnessed the public performance by migrant groups regarding their cultural heritage on 23 NOVEMBER 2025 at IAN HANGER RECITAL HALL, QUEENSLAND CONSERVATORIUM. You do not need to be able to read English, but are ideally accompanied by a friend or relative or can translate (survey is written in English).

The expected benefits of the research

This research is expected to benefit migrant communities and cultural heritage industries by assisting them in identifying what important information is missing from Queensland heritage collections regarding specific migrant communities. The project will assist in connecting communities with heritage institutions as part of an ongoing relationship that may result in the preservation of culturally significant materials.

Risks to you

There is an overall low level of risk associated with participation in this project. There are no physical risks involved. There is a low level of risk that discussing cultural heritage may lead to distress. If you feel discussions about your heritage will provoke trauma, then you are encouraged to protect your mental health and to carefully consider your participation.

If you do experience distress, you are encouraged to contact one of the below organisations:
